When in Rome, Do as Reason Would

By: Gary Rhodes, Ph.D., Director
SAFETI Clearinghouse, Center for Global Education at UCLA

This month's article discusses a common issue for students studying abroad: going along with the crowd. As the old saying goes, when in Rome, do as the Romans would. The article presents three separate instances where following the crowd resulted in either the injury or death of students and argues that these tragic occurrences might be prevented in the future with better education and preparation for students going abroad.
